FRENCH HERMIT'S LONELY HUT.

Mickael Merkel Reads Nothing Later Than 1870 and Lives in a Forest.

New York World.

Many people think that Michael Merkel is the victim of misdirected patriotism, and that the Franco-Prussian war, which the beautiful country to the

and that the France-Pressure values and that the France-Pressure to the Prench soured his life. He lives in a sequestered retreat on the edge of Lake Osnot far from Lantana, where his hu born, not far from Lamana, where its frequently visited by winter visitors to Florida. The flut, which he built himself, is about ten feet in height, and it is sixteen feet from corner to corner. It is built of palmetto logs and thatched with pairons of the corner in etto leaves. The interior of the but is scantily

The interior of the but is scantly furnished. No chair is visible. The guest sits on the ground and leans against the wall. His host crouches up in an opposite corner of the hut. In one corner are deer, otter and coon skins, stretched at full length on the ground. The hermit's bed is thus provided.

There is not a table or a lamp or any furniture in the hut. No cooking utensils are there, and only a gun and a hunting knife are visible.

Against the wall are a pile of well-worn newspapers. They are French journals of dates prior to 1870. Merkel speaks English fairly well. He is a well-educated the second of the s enchman. His hair is worn rather long Frenchman. His hair is worn rainer page. His heard is shaved, and he wears only a mustiche. His eyes are bright and piercing, and his face is a handsome one.

For eighteen years Merkel has not worn shoes. His clothes are made of canvas and were rudely fashioned and put together by himself. He cuts his own hair, shaves by himself. He cuit his own tast, snaves his beard and does his own cooking and laundry work. He cooks in the open air in front of his hut. In the rear of the hut is a rack on which are placed to dry the akins of different kinds of game. His food akins of different kinds of game. His food is composed of Indian commeal and fish and game. Once every three years he goes to the nearest village and exchanges a bundle of skins for Indian meal. Merkel's retirement from the world is not due, he says, to any dislike for society. He is an enterlaining conversationally

He is an entertaining conversationalist but does not keep informed. He has not read a paper of a later date than 1870, and his only literature is his old French read a paper of the state of the state of the papers, which he reads over and over again.

Michael Merkel was born in Alsace in Michael Merkel was born in Assace in 1839. When a young man he left France with his mother and brother and went to Chicago. His mother was an invalid, and he spent six years in the same house with her without going outside the door. Thus he be-came inured to a solitary life. When his mother died he went South and settled at his present abode. For three years he lived on nothing but fish that he caught from the lake. He used salt water in which to cook his fish, and had no salt, pepper or

For Night Fishing.

An electric genius has come to the aid of night fishermen. Men who catch eels and other fresh water fish for the market sometimes set as many as a dozen lines. These must be taken up from time to time for examination. The new device is an arrangement by which, when the fish or eel is hooked, the first pull closes an electric circuit-a fine wire nning plongside the line-and a tiny bel at the shore end sounds the alarm. A small storage battery is part of the equipment

HOW SALA WROTE.

Kept a Cabinet of Clippings and Ground Out the "Stuff."

Yorkshire (Eng.) Pest. Sala's leading articles were of a class in-vented by himself. If he had to write, say, on "Gorgonzola," he would begin with sketch of Adam and Eve in the Garder of Eden, and hazard a problem as to their utilizing goat's milk to make the cheese; and thus he would wander on through the ages, touching on every subject that did not suggest itself, until he had filled his sqipedalian column and a half. The only way in which this sort of writing was possible was in the collection and arrangement of daily facts. His scrap books were neatly filled with cuttings on all imaginable subjects. He had enormous cabinets in whose innumerable drawers were sorted the memoranda cuiled daily for half a century of years. Say he wanted to write on "Cats." He would go to his Natural History cabinet, and in the "C" compartment would find columns and columns of reference to cats; history, anec dote, theory, adventure, reminiscence.

What he had to do was to sort his ma-Pennsylvania Railroad to Baltimore and Return.

Cleveland Rose to the Bait.

A well-known young physician, who is a rabid Republican, tells with give of a practical joke he played on President Cleveland last summer. He was fishing in Buzzard's Bay one morning, and, though an old hand at the sport, did not get so much as a bite.

Further down the bay he could see President Cleveland and Joe Jefferson, who were hav-ing the same luck. Making up his mind to have sport of some kind, he fastened his batt can to the end of a line, and then threw it out and drew it in again with a quick,

Jerky motion. After he had done this half a derky motion. After he had done this had a dozen times, the President's boat started in his direction. When it got into bailing distance, Jefferson called out: "You seem to be having good luck, so we came over!" For answer the delighted young man held up at arm's length his bait can. The boats rowed offin different directions!—New York Harald.

Give It to Him Next Year.

A unique Christmas present received by one of that difficult class to provide for—one of that difficult class to provide for-the men of one's family or friendly circle-was of cloth for the card table. A square of smooth finished green cloth was deco-rated in each corner with a fac simile group of cards, five cards composing each, which were painted on white satin and the satin then neatly appliqued with fine stitches on the cloth. Along the sides ran suitable mottoes, as "When in doubt lead trumps," traced in fine gold cord. The cloth was pinked on the edges as a finish.
